The President has nominated John S. Fay for appointment as Postmaster at Mariboro, Mass. Mr. Fay is the present Postmaster and has held office 36 years, longer than any other Presidential Postmaster ever served. He was originally appointed by President Johnson on April 26, 1865, and since that time has served under eight different Presidents. The salary of the office has increased 130 per cent, since the date of his first appoint-ment-from $1,100 in 1865 to $2,500 at . . .

Although not officially announced, it was stated that has retired from the firm. Although Gen. Henderson will enter a New York law firm as successor to ex-Speaker Reed.

The collection of papers of President Jackson, which were in the possession of Montgomery Blair, Postmaster-General in President Lincoln's Cabinet, and on his death passed to his four children, have been given to the Library of Congress.

These papers are very voluminous, com-prising thousands of manuscripts and volumes. They include not merely letters to and from President Jackson, but muster rolls, military reports, and various memo-randa. They run back prior to the year 1800 and come down to the time of Jackson's death, in 1845. The most important of them date from the year 1812.

In transmitting the papers to the Library the children ask that the gift be known as the "Montgomery Blair Collection." The collection has been received by Librarian Putnam, but the papers will have to be gone over very carefully before they will be accessible to public inspec-tion. It has been found that not only

The Daughters of the American Revolution have just brought to a close their 12th Continental Congress. It was the most gorgeously appareled Congress in the series of 12. Every woman who had any good clothes put them on, and also seemed to have put off her good manners with her old clothes, for it was undoubtedly the noisiest and most disorderly of the 12. There was no reason for it being noisy, for there was very little acrimonious discontinuously. The congress being, in fact, very harmonious, but the delegates wanted to talk, and visit, and move about, and they proceeded to do it, without regard to the President-General.

The pretty little silver-mounted gavel went to pieces the very first day. There after the President-General used a tack of the proposition.

Castle, Auditor for the Post-Office Department; Representatives Frank M. Eddy, Page Morris, Loren President-General, Mrs. Daniel Manning, President-General, Mrs. Daniel Manning, National Society was on the point of the National Society was on the point of disintegrating. Mrs. Manning was Presi-dent-General for three years, and was so thoroughly disliked when she left the office that she has never appeared at a Congress since. She always sat in a throne chair in the Congress, over which she carefully threw her ermine-lined cape when she seated herself, and she had three gorgeous gowns for each day's session—one for morning, one for afternoon, and one for evening. Her knowledge of parliamentary law was limited to calling for the "yea and nay" vote. She had a parliamentarian at her side, but she usually got that lady so rattled during the first hour of the Congress that she was fit for nothing during the remainder of the session.

> you to know that she was supporting the dignity of her office. Mrs. Fairbanks is sweet-faced and downright "chummy." has bright, smiling dark eyes that twinkle when funny things strike her, and that is often. But, after all, you never forget the dignity of the position that Mrs. Fairbanks fills socially as well as officially. She is absolutely impartial in dealing out favors or justice, and she has had many difficult things to do in harmonizing elements left in a turmoil by the former incumbent of her high office. That she has succeeded admirably was shown by her unanimous election to a second term of office. To accomplish this, Mrs. Donald McLean, of New York, who was a formidable opponent, withdrew from the race in the interest of "peace," as she stated in seconding the nomination of Mrs. Fair-

There were wild scenes about that time, and the excited delegates nearly lifted the roof with their cheers. It is not likely that there will be any opposition to Mrs. McLean's election as President-General two years hence. She is brainy, patriotic, and knows things. In fact, she knows so many things that she has been in hot water most of the time in the National Society, but Mrs. Fairbanks and Mrs. Mc-Lean get on very well together.

Not much legislation was accomplished. The principal thing done was to change the date of meeting of the Continental Congress from Feb. 22 to April 19. The next Continental Congress will meet April

The Additions to Make the Grand Building More Symmetrical and Convenient. The illustration of the Capitol extension shows quite plainly the additions that are to be made to the grand old building. It will be seen that the addition, while changing the outline a little, does not change the general appearance of the white marble structure, which as it stands today is the most beautiful Capitol building in the world. It is a fact, how-ever, that two-thirds of its committee rooms are deadly unsanitary. In many
